The first is the question of whether the "facts" of who and what one is "if to take them simply as facts is indeed the proper way of thinking of them, the "facts" of one's identity, in other words, do not constitute some sort of rationally compelling passage from statements of fact to certain value judgments and the second is the ...

A Philosophical Retrospective: Facts, Values, and Jewish

A Philosophical Retrospective offers an illuminating exploration of the complexities and ambiguities of the modern notion of identity, so central to today's politics. Alan Montefiore examines this notion against two radically different backgrounds: the fundamental philosophical issue of the relation to facts and values, and the highly ...
