Dulce et decorum est pro patria mori is a line from the Roman lyrical poet Horace's Odes (III.2.13). The line is usually translated as: "It is sweet and proper to die for one's country." The Latin word patria, meaning the country of one's fathers (Latin patres) or ancestors, is the source of the French word for a country, patrie, as well as the English word patriot (one who loves his country).

John's book, A Sweet and Glorious Land: Revisiting the Ionian Sea, is a great travel adventure--even more interesting, to me, than the original Gissing work he based this book upon. I made one of his many Gissing re-tracings with John last year during an unusually cold period for extreme Southern Italy.

There's an old hymn we sing around here from time to time he sun rose the next morning with a glorious conflagration of pink and yellow. The air was fresh, sweet, and very cold. Ice edged the streams, and small pools were completely frozen over. After a breakfast of porridge, Eragon returned to the glen and examined the charred area. The morning light revealed no new details, so he started for home.
